Presbyterian Reunion.

The Presbyterian reunion, held Thursday at Pen Mar, was attended by large delegations of that faith and their friends, the crowd being estimated at about 10,000. The principal address was made by Henry Brockenridge, assistant Secretary of War, who spoke drilling by platoons. A test of this system was made under the direction of the camp commander, Capt. Chuliffe H. Murray, to-day for the purpose of determining how the new system is working out. Members of the army are being drilled in the morning, instructing the men in the new drills each day, and the troopers are showing great enthusiasm and interest in the work. There are three men in each platoon commanded by a sergeant, with four platoons to a squadron.

There probably will be five or six men from this regiment, under the new regulations, are adopted by the War Department. In two weeks the troops will be drilled by squadrons, later by regiments, and finally the entire brigade will be in the saddle.

About $15,000 was distributed among the officers and troopers of the Eleventh Cavalry on Thursday evening, that amount representing their pay for July. Large numbers of the men of that regiment spent last evening and to-night in Winchester.

Major Charles H. Boyd, of the Third Cavalry, and Captain J. M. Boy-son of Dr. H. L. Sumption, formerly of Winchester, but now of Portland, Ore., were killed last week while motor cars in which they were driving two young women and a young man, Sumption, who had had little experience with motor cars, had been warned. It is stated, by his companions about the road, that he appears that he did not heed their request to get out of the car. While making at least forty-five miles an hour, the machine struck a soft place in the road, swerved to one side, dashed against a telephone pole, and then rolled over. Captain Sumption, who was twenty-one years old, and a grandson of Mrs. L. V. Con-for several days on special duty. He has been ordered to France on duty with the French cavalry for a year, and will leave shortly for that country.

Secretary E. T. McLeod, of the cavalry board, has gone on his annual leave of absence, and will return about September 1.

Rumors and rumblings of probable intervention in Mexico has not disturbed the routine of the camp here, although the officers are constantly discussing Mexican and other foreign affairs among themselves. One officer stated to-day that the program of instruction, mapped out after months of preparation, undoubtedly would be carried out, but that there would be a very serious interruption in event of intervention in Mexico. It was the impression tricated not fatally hurt. The other escaped with minor injuries. Young McKeon had a large family connection in Virginia, the District of Columbia and Maryland.

Hunting for Highwaymen.

Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and county detectives at Weverton are hunting the country in that section for two highwaymen, who assaulted a Baltimore and Ohio passenger train in Loudoun County, and then hid him in a culvert, where he was found by freight trainmen with three ribs broken. The crime was committed near the spot where Jack Burns, a New York spe-that the Winchester camp would remain as it is at this time, unless the entire cavalry arm of the service is called upon to move to the new line.

Given Thorough Inspection.

The Shenandoah division of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad was given a thorough inspection yesterday by President Daniel C. McGinnis and a number of officials, including many heads of departments. The special train of the president left Harper's Ferry in the morning and arrived at Lexington late in the afternoon.

The return trip was made Monday.

Superintendent G. E. Brooke, of this division, which extends from Harpers Ferry to Strasburg Junction and from Harpersburg to Lees Ferry, was completely disabled by many of the officials upon the numerous improvements he has had made during the past year to the roadbed, the rolling stock and the roadbed property in general. It was announced that a new personnel will be authorized for Staunton.

Heavy Damage by Storm.

The cyclonic storm which did such great damage in Washington on Wednesday, did not spare the Shenandoah valley. In the immediate vicinity of Winchester, about 11 o'clock in the county, died at her home here last week, after a brief illness of weakening of the heart, aged forty-three years. In addition to her husband and parents, she leaves two sisters and a son. She was the daughter of Rev. Zed H. Copp, formerly of Washington, but now pastor of a Philadelphia church.

This section of the State is to be largely represented at the tenth annual session of the Virginia State Farmers' Institute in Lynchburg, August 10 and 11, by S. Westmoreland Davis, of Leesburg, is president. A number of experts connected with the Federal agricul-morning and until some time after the noon hour, ominous looking clouds hung over this city, and scores of residents closed their doors and outside window blinds, expecting a hailstorm at any moment, but the gray-looking clouds passed directly toward Washington. According to reports received from the army, a severe fight between the lower Shenandoah Valley and the national capital, although in the upper portion of the valley the storm was furious, doing much damage to the crops and property, and also along the railroads. Wheat and hay ricks were blown over, hundreds of trees were uprooted or twisted off near the ground, and some telephone poles were snapped in two. While there was much lightning, the bolts seem to have wrought little harm. A day or two earlier a terrifying electrical storm visited the Winchester region, striking the city and blowing down a barn and contents for Samuel Rinker, and a valuable driving horse owned by George Branner, was killed by striking fifty yards away from his house. A large fire broke out in a temporary store near the United States cavalry camp was struck and splintered, and some young men and girls were injured. In the store, together with proprietors and customers, were on the floor. A number of the young women were rendered unconscious, and all felt the effects of the lightning for several days.

Buried at Front Royal.

The body of Plagman Esten H. Winsborough, who died in a hospital at Hagerstown on Thursday, from injuries received in the battle of Gettysburg, the Western Marylander, who died near Thurmont while asleep, was taken to Front Royal, his homeplace, and interred in the cemetery there. He was twenty-five years old and unmarried.

A freight conductor to guard a rear-end switch, as another train was about due. He is said to have been on duty series of the various congressional districts are expected to make reports in their respective congressional wards and domestic science.

Fights With Rattlesnake.

Eugene Campbell, of this county, who is a member of the corps of engineers employed by the government to survey large tracts of land in Hardy, Hampshire and Frederick counties, which will be made parts of the Potomac watershed, had the fight of his life a day or two ago, when he was attacked by a rattlesnake in a ferny place. The snake, which was about a foot long, was about a foot from the bell was some distance behind other members of the party, and was about to pass a ledge of rock over which it had grown, when he heard the snake hiss and the deadly sound of the reptile a heavy blow just as it sprang at him. Although the snake's back was broken by the blow, Campbell, who was unarmed, by jumping upon the head of the rattler, killed it. He has sent the skin to relatives here to be chemically treated and kept as a trophy. The snake was thirty inches long, and its tail was thirteen rattles and a button.

William J. Adams, twenty-one year old, died this week in a Canton, O., hospital from injuries sustained while resting with a friend, and his remains were taken to his home at Gainesboro, near his old home, where he was a son of A. A. Adams, of this county, and also leaves a young widow and a step-mother and one sister.

James C. Baker, of this county, came to Winchester recently and drove to the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. G. Baker, about fifteen miles northwest of town, and there asked for the hand of their daughter, Miss Carrie C. Baker, twenty years of age. They were married in Washington on the following day, and it is stated
